KNOW FIRE PREVENTION

Officers of Fire Companies
Must Not Only Be Good
Fire Fighters.

Must Lay Out Their Work So That
Whole District Is Covered and Apply Themselves Intelligently.

Besides being an expert fire-fighter, the officer in charge of a company should be a fire prevention expert and be able to select suitable men and train them to become good inspectors. He should lay out their work in such a way that his whole district would be properly covered. I know captains who can go into a building like a grain elevator, for instance, check up the whole sprinkler system from top to bottom and give an intelligent report on its condition throughout; who can test out the fire pump in any plant in conformity with Underwriters' requirements, figure out the rated capacity, the actual work performed and with the assistance of the engineer in charge tell very nearly what the trouble is if it does not deliver its full capacity under the required pressure. They could not do this a few years ago, and it shows what a little study and practice will do. By applying themselves in the same intelligent manner to other branches of their work they become competent instructors in their respective companies and compel the respect of everyone with whom they come in contact. Men of that caliber are valuable to the department and should be compensated commensurate with their worth.—Olaf Johnson.
